Once Upon The Kenai

Stories from the people

"At home celebrating Christmas," wrote Andy Berg in 1928 from his isolated cabin on Tustumena Lake. "Did not know just how to go about it but have heard that cleanliness is next to Godliness so I heated water and had a bath. Made a cake for myself and cooked a nice fat lynx for my dog."

Excerpts from Berg's diary, along with over 250 first-person stories from people who lived on the Kenai Peninsula's west central region in 1962 or before, are included in this book — plus more than 450 photographs, several drawings, newspaper clippings and a rare list of Kenai people surveyed in 1934.

Louisa Miller writes: "There was not a Catholic church in Kenai . . . so we had mass in our ice cream parlor. Father Thompson faced the people over the counter. Pies would be baking and coffee perking."

From Clarice Kipp: "We very seldom suffered from 'cabin fever.' After a long dark winter we occasionally did silly things like dressing up and putting on ALL of our costume jewelry and lunching out: a sandwich at the drug store."

Helen Keppel: "Helen Jones and I had an unofficial medical clinic in the back of her store, and contacted Dr. O'Malley in Anchorage for medical advice."

And from Shirley Tachick Kosto: "I am fortunate to have been a young girl growing up in the 'good old days' on the Kenai. The memories of my family and other pioneers are varied and colorful, like the people themselves, and all woven together create my Alaskan Heritage."

This is indeed a unique collection of experiences that took place in a developing land. There were bouts with bears and moose, struggles to provide shelter, food and schooling for the children — and bonds of comradeship back when sharing was a way of life and everybody knew everybody.

Book and jacket design by Mary Ford. Cache on cover from photo of Keppel cache by M. Ford.
