NOME

The metropolis of Seward Peninsula and Northwestern Alaska, located at the mouth of Snake River on Bering Sea. It first came to the attention of the public generally in the summer of 1898, and during the next two years many thousands of people sought their fortunes there. It was not, however, until the fall of 1900 that a normal basis was reached and a well regulated government of affairs established. Nome is geographically so situated as to control the entire trade of Northeastern Siberia, Seward Peninsula and Northwestern Alaska, and is yearly increasing its trade relations with the lower Yukon Valley.

In the early rush days most of the mining was done on the beach and along the famous Anvil Creek, located about five miles distant. Since then the miner and prospector have extended their activities in all directions and have penetrated miles into the interior. At the present time mining is going on, in greater or less degree, in every part of the territory. Although mined for years beyond the usual life of placer countries, the enormous extent of gold bearing territory is far from being developed and new discoveries are constantly being made. The earlier and more primitive forms of mining have been largely supplanted by later forms and the hydraulic lift and mammoth gold dredge have taken the place of the sluice box and rocker. At the present time the country adjacent to Nome is largely given over to dredging, thousands of acres of low grade alluvial deposits practically insuring the permanency of this industry and also that of the city.

Nome has a winter population of 2,500 and the increase during the summer months approximates 1,800; it has a municipal organization and a good fire department; a waterworks system operating during the open season; the town site is patented and the streets are planked and graded. The city is provided with a public school with an average attendance of one hundred and employs seven teachers. The curriculum is comparable with the best in the schools of other sections of the United States and graduates are accredited to many of the large universities. Nome is the judicial seat of the Second Division of Alaska and is also the headquarters of the postal service for Northern Alaska; has a government life-saving station, a customs house, a United States land office, and is the terminus of the government telegraph service, which includes wires, wireless and cable in completing telegraphic communication with the United States; has an electric light plant and a telephone

The era of Quartz Mining is at hand; prospectors are flocking into the country; the noise of the stamp mill is resounding throughout the land and a new industrial day is dawning in the Land of the Midnight Sun. Alaska wants "hard rock" prospectors to uncover its vast riches. New copper and gold quartz strikes are being reported and oil, agricultural experiments and advances in fishing, are aiding in the

of the vast Inland Empire, "America's Last Frontier." Just completed through the heart of this wonderful and heavily mineralized region is the COPPER RIVER & NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY—Alaska's New Trunk Line—The World's New Scenic Route—affording easy access to the interior and a new and excellent route in connection with the Orr stages at Chitina to Fairbanks.

system, both local and long distance, and is in communication with all parts of the district. There are three churches, Catholic, Congregationalist and Federated; a Masonic lodge, Arctic Brotherhood, Eagles, Odd Fellows and Moose lodges. With two exceptions the fraternal organizations own elaborate buildings. Two daily and one weekly newspaper, two banks with deposits of nearly two million dollars, and an excellent hospital conducted by the Sisters of Charity; it has accommodations for fifty patients and is well equipped with the essentials of surgery, including an X-ray machine. There are three prominent hotels. All of the organizations maintain finely furnished club rooms. Nearly one hundred business houses representing all lines cater to the needs of the community and carry large and complete stocks. The professions are also well represented. During the open season the mails arrive by every steamer; in winter by dog teams over 1,800 miles of snow and ice. The winter service is weekly and letters arrive from the States inside of six weeks.
